Edward R. Burian is an Associate Professor at the University of Texas at San Antonio in the Department of Architecture. The focus of his research, teaching, and architectural practice are the contemporary conditions of place, the sensory body-oriented experience of architecture, and the thoughtful crafting of materials. His professional architectural projects have appeared in national publications and won regional design awards. He is a noted scholar on the architecture, urbanism, and material culture of Mexico and the region, and is particularly interested in undervalued aspects of the rich architectural culture of Mexico. His books and essays on the architectural culture of Mexico have been widely disseminated in 360 libraries around the world, cited and referenced over 230 times in books and periodicals, and used as texts in leading universities in the U.S., Latin America, and Europe.

Future research interests include books and video documentaries on the contemporary architectural culture of Mexico and the region related to materiality, leisure, and residential architecture; continuing to document undervalued architects in Mexico whose works are largely unknown, as well as the establishment of a book series with a major university or architectural press that gathers, interprets, and republishes the primary architectural texts of Mexico in both Spanish and English.
